Wade Hampton is quite condescending. He admits that Garfield is properly elected, and advises the Democrats not to attempt the foolish movement of crying fraud.

"The election is over," says the New York Times, "and the Democratic party is greeted with the humiliating spectacle of the chairman of its National committee pilloried between two self-confessed perjurers."

The Boston Traveller is responsible for the statement that the Republicans of New York raised a purse of four thousand dollars for General Garfield toward the close of the campaign. The General has not been blest with much of this world's goods, and the demands of hospitality, traveling and telegraphing during the summer and fall, caused him much distress and uneasiness of mind. This reached the ears of his friends in New York, and a purse of $4,000 was raised for him, and the General did not know the source from whence it came.

Inasmuch as the Chinese letter has proven to be a forgery, and that the National Democratic committee knew it was a forgery when they hired stereotyped plates made of it for distribution among the Democratic papers, and the committee now confess that it was a forgery, will some one of the party papers be honest enough to denounce it as a low, dishonest, and a libelous trick? We presume there is not a single Democratic paper in all the country which will have the manliness to rebuke Barnum and the rest of the committee for this piece of political infamy.

Governor Colquitt, of Georgia, is troubled. His heart is heavy. He has dark forebodings in regard to the South. He does not see any hope for the country as long as the North refuses to endorse the Democratic party. The rebuke which the Democracy received in the North completely crushes the spirit and blots the hopes of the dyspeptic Governor of Georgia. But before President Garfield finishes his first term, Governor Colquitt may not feel so bad. His health may be improved, his equanimity recovered, and he may possibly learn that even with a defeated Democracy, the country will continue to prosper. The country has managed to get along wonderfully well during the past twenty years without the help of the Democratic party, and it can get along equally as well for the next twenty years should the party continue to be defeated.

The success of the Milwaukee Sunday Telegraph shows what brains, industry, excellent judgment, and journalistic experience can accomplish. There is no family or society paper in the West that deserves success more than the Sunday Telegraph. Its columns devoted to literature, personal news, and general literature, are of special interest, and have given the Telegraph a commanding position in the State and a wide circulation. Messrs. Calkins & Watrous are to be congratulated on their successful newspaper venture in Milwaukee. The paper is not only a first class family journal, full of choice personal, literary, and general topics, but in a business point of view, it is keeping what it so richly deserves—financial prosperity. It is a good thing to have such a paper in Wisconsin, and it is a good thing to have it peculiarly successful.

A PRESIDENTIAL PENSION FUND.
A movement has been set on foot in the East to raise a Presidential pension fund, for the support of the oldest President of the United States during his life. The New York Times is the first paper in the East to endorse the scheme. Starting out with the proposition that for a man who has once occupied the position of the first citizen of this Republic, it is impossible for him to return to the comparatively humble position from which he has emerged, the Times argues that for a man so circumstanced, who is neither public officer nor private citizen, to whom the fact of having filled the highest position in the country is a positive barrier to the acceptance of any humble responsibilities, the problem of earning a living is apt to become both embarrassing and difficult. Taking this view of the question, the Times says it is extremely questionable whether the people of the United States consult either the dignity of their country or the successful working of their institutions by failing to make some provision for removing their ex-President above the temptations or the discomforts incidental to genteel poverty.

For these reasons, a number of gentlemen in the East, belonging to both political parties, have proposed a subscription fund of a national character, which will be perpetual, and out of the annual income of this the oldest ex-President of the United States, shall live. The minimum capital shall be $250,000, and its probable income not less than $125,000. Already, subscriptions to the amount of $50,000 have been secured outside of New York city, and the millions of the latter place will probably swell the amount to a quarter of a million or possibly more. There is an effort being made to take the matter out of the hands of the wealthy citizens, and have the movement more general, so that the whole people will have an opportunity to contribute something to the fund.

There is no doubt that the fund will be raised, and as to the wisdom of the movement there may be differences of opinion. It certainly has no political significance, as wealthy citizens of both parties are ready to subscribe $100 each to the fund.

MATT CARPENTER.

His Robust Health and Splendid Appearance—His Future Career in the Senate.

The Policy of President Garfield's Administration as to the Offices.

Special Correspondence to the Sunday Telegraph.

SENATOR CARPENTER'S HEALTH.
WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—I have called on Senator Matt H. Carpenter twice within a few days, and was both surprised and pleased to find him enjoying splendid health, and the most robust, genial, magnetic man that I have known since I was a boy. He was born in 1821, when he opened his campaign as a war Democrat, in favor of the prosecution of the war, and as the red hot enemy of the sophists and conspiracies of the copperhead and rebel element of the Southern Democracy. He has taken the greatest interest in the events of the late campaign, but as he was daily growing stronger in health and vigor, and his physician did not wish him to encounter the danger of a "set back," and as the Republican prospects brightened, he did not go upon the stump. He was very reticent under the restraints imposed upon him, as he dislikes to see a fight without taking a hand in it, and had there been any exposed point

WHICH HE COULD HAVE PROTECTED, or any need of his services, he would not have hesitated; but it fortunately proved unnecessary, and he is now enjoying the results of the war which he has taken of his health, and of the consideration of the party managers who did not peremptorily demand from him active and laborious service in the canvass. He has all the law practice that he can attend to, and is daily hurrying from court to court, being retained on one side or the other of nearly all the most important cases, and enjoying the confidence of the bar and of the representatives of the great interests affected by pending litigation. He is probably the most industrious lawyer at the Washington bar, as he is the ADULT AND MOST SUCCESSFUL. In repeated conversations with him on political topics, he freely stated his views and intentions as to the future. He is well known to be an enthusiastic Grant man, and desired the nomination of the great captain for the presidency. He forms one of the most conspicuous members of "the old guard," who, after the disaster in Maine, and the Republican prospects darkened, and gloomy and desperate, took to the canvass in Indiana and New York on their shoulders, and carried it to a successful result. He did not share in the most rigorous labor of the canvass, but was in close counsel with Cook, Grant, Don Cameron, Logan and the other leaders, and he was the brains and the backbone which secured the election. He did not tell your correspondent this, for he never boasts of his labors, but it is common report among the politicians and campaign managers. Senator Carpenter is in the inside

RING OF STALWART REpublicANS who will form the body guard and privy council of President Garfield's administration, and his influence will be all powerful in such directions as may be desired. His property he will not use, and he will not be backward to the claims of public duty.

Senator Carpenter will not, probably, make himself prominent in the senate while it remains under Bourbon control. The coming winter, as it were, has been lighted to light solid reactionary force as long as they have a majority. But he is confident that there will be a sufficient

BREAK IN THE SOLID SOUTH at the opening of Garfield's administration to secure a Republican majority in the senate to support the Republican majority in the House, and to answer the demands of enlightened Republicans thought in the nation.

Senator Carpenter has a realizing sense of the great need to the country of a policy which shall abolish sectional interests and politics, and end the dividing line between the North and South, but he deems the protection of every citizen of the republic in all his rights, civil, political and personal, as the imperative duty of the hour, and that an efficacious policy should be adopted and energetically put in place of the various plans of conciliating

WHICH HAVE FAILED of any good results. He has under consideration measures looking to this end which will push upon the attention of the senate, if they shall meet the views of the stalwart senators with whom he will act in concert. The scope and details of these measures he did not discuss in conversation, but he has given them long and mature thought, and does not doubt that they will be approved by the republican majority of congress and the advanced republican opinion of the people of the country. Senator Carpenter was always national in his views, as the duty of the nation towards the South, and did not believe in the efficacy of the reconstruction measures, because, while they provided a temporary cure for the ills of traitors at the south, they also provided in themselves means for the restoration of the REBEL AND SLAVE-HOLDING ELEMENTS to power in all the states, and the terrors of the Ku Klux, the rifle clubs, the red shirts, the night riders and bull-dozers have followed.

The people of Wisconsin will undoubtedly be glad to learn that the restored health of their brilliant senator opens for him a renewed career of usefulness, and that his ripe abilities and persuasive eloquence will render him doubly useful as one of the pillars of President Garfield's administration, and in the important legislation for the country which the restoration of republican rule in all the departments of the government will involve.

ANOTHER EXPLOSION.

The Terrible Explosion in the Steel-Action Coal Mine.

HALIFAX, Nov. 14.—Last night about 10 o'clock another very heavy explosion occurred in the Ford pit at the Steel-Action coal mine, blowing the roof and gear of the fan shaft, timber brick, etc., high into the air, the descending debris falling on the workshops in the vicinity of the fan shaft and damaging them considerably. There was no one in the mine at the time except Ross, the engineer of the fan engine, and one or two others, who were working near the fan. They with difficulty escaped, being hurt by falling debris. It was expected more explosions would take place during the night, but nothing more occurred, although a large body of smoke was continually issuing from the furnace. This morning a steam fire engine was obtained to pump a stream of water into the pit, and the firemen were just getting into position when, about half-past 12, another blast occurred, and an immense volume of smoke and dust from the fan shaft high into the air. A large number of people who were standing around, seated in all directions to avoid falling debris, and fortunately no person was hurt. The blast caused very little noise, only a peculiar hissing sound being heard, probably from the immense quantity of gas and smoke through the shaft. All seemed quiet up to the time about the hoisting and pumping shafts, which are a distance of two hundred and fifty yards from the fan shaft, but about ten minutes to 1 another immense volume of smoke and dust issued from the fan shaft, and then it also poured the fire from both the fan shaft and hoisting shafts. A few minutes later the shafts and airpipes to be drawn down into, and this smoking in a symptom of another explosion. The spectators hastily got out of the way. Another volume of smoke, denser than the preceding, came forth a few minutes after, but there was no noise, and at every blast the smoke became darker and it was black as ink. It is fully expected that the fire in the mine, which now must be immense, will show itself in the mouth of the shaft, when all buildings in the vicinity will be in the greatest danger of destruction. A gang of men are at work digging a trench to let water into the mine from the river, which is close by, and by this it is hoped to extinguish the fire; but great fears are entertained that the fire will completely destroy the workings of the pit.

William Dmbar, who was found insensible by his son at the bottom of the pit soon after the first explosion by which the large loss of life was caused, is lying in a very precarious state, and is very doubtful if he will recover.

The loss sustained by the Halifax Mining company, which owns the mine, can not at present be estimated.

The employees of the International railway between Halifax, Spring Hill, and Pictou have appointed a committee to receive aid from those working on the railway for the widows and orphans of the unfortunate men.

An inquest will be held in New Glasgow to-morrow on the two bodies recovered. There is not the slightest chance of the remains of the bodies of the forty or fifty victims in the pit being recovered.

MARSHALL JEWELL.

Re Promises Starting Developments in Connection With the Morley Forgery.

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 13.—Marshall Jewell was here today looking after a big thing he owns. Being interviewed on the Morley letter he said: "You need not be astonished if you see some startling developments before long. The National Committee don't propose to let the matter drop simply because the election is over. The prosecution of all the parties concerned will be conducted to the end, and the National Committee will furnish all possible aid. I hope every Democrat who had anything to do with concealing or publishing that infamous forgery will be in the penitentiary before we get through with them. I won't mention names, but you can guess who they are." Concerning the frauds raised by Democrats in New York, he said it was only to divert attention from themselves. He refused to discuss campaign matters further. His stay here will be several days.

WADE HAMPTON.
Re Considers the Presidential Election Settled.

important, especially to the South, that the Democratic party should retain its organization. The fact that our friends of the North were not able to give us as large a vote as they had hoped for is no reason that we should desert them. The policy of the party will be dictated by future events. I regard the Morley election as settled, and I should oppose any action looking to contest on mere technical grounds as revolutionary."

AN APPALLING CRIME.

Such is Judge Davis' Opinion of the Morley Forgery.

New York, Nov. 13.—The fact that Chief Justice Noah Davis was to deliver his opinion today in the case of Kenward Philip, charged with criminal libel on General Garfield, drew a crowd of spectators this morning to the supreme court, in which the decision was announced. Before the Judge took his place on the bench, nearly all the seats provided for the general public were occupied, and the claims within the railing reserved for members of the bar and other privileged persons were also filled. The press was largely represented, and rows of spectators standing close together fringed the enclosure already mentioned.

The prisoner occupied a seat near his counsel. Counsel for Joseph Hart was also near by. The prosecution was represented by Assistant District Attorney Doel, E. W. Stoughton, George Bliss, and John L. Davenport. Elihu Root, Joel E. Hubbard, and Assistant District Attorney Rollins were among the other persons present.

In substance, the opinion is as follows: He held that it was fully and indisputably proved to every person "free from obliquity of vision or perversion of judgment" that the Morley letter was a forgery; that no such persons as H. L. Morley or J. W. Goodall have had existence; that the letter never was sent to General Garfield; that it was caused and dictated to be made by the writer on the envelope, the body of the letter, and the signature, were in the same handwriting; and further that whoever wrote it was guilty of a malicious libel. He also held that those who published the letter, knowing that it was not genuine, were guilty of libel—that they were guilty even if they had not pretty positive evidence of its genuineness. In the course of his decision the Judge administered a stinging and well-deserved rebuke to Mr. Abram Hewitt upon whom, he said, "the rest of the larger share of the responsibility for the first publication of the case and the shameful forgery," and further, that "his subsequent relations to the forgery do not lift a single shadow from his conduct." Nor does Mr. Barnum come off unscathed. As the attorney and distributor of the forged document, he is morally as guilty as the forger, and having distributed it after its genuineness was denied by Gen. Garfield, his responsibility was all the greater. The last important part of the remarkable decision, heard and startling decision that which committed Philip for trial under bond of $25,000.

THE PRESIDENT-ELECT.

MENTOR, Nov. 13.—This has been the most quiet day at Landonville since November 2. There was talk that the President-elect would be called upon by a businesslike delegation of Republican admirers, but the better judgment of those people prevailed, and they did not come. Hence General Garfield was able to pass a great part of the day with his secretaries in working off the large stack of communications that have been received during the past few days. It turns out that when in Cleveland yesterday and day before, the General and Mrs. Garfield made extensive purchases for their home, and Mrs. Garfield left a few valuable ornaments with milliners and dressmakers of the city.

ELECTRIC LIGHT.

SALT LAKE, U. T., Nov. 14.—Ogden is the first city west of the Mississippi to adopt the electric light. A flag-staff sixty feet high is to be run up from the court house dome, giving an elevation of 200 feet, from which will be suspended four lights of 8,000-candle-power. Each is guaranteed to abundantly illuminate a mile in diameter. The lights will be in operation in January.

OBITUARY.

Oconomowoc, Wis., Nov. 14.—Joseph J. Mann, a prosperous and well-known farmer, who for five years has suffered indescribable agony of mind and body, died at his residence yesterday morning of a cancer on his neck, and had gradually worked himself to an aneurism. The disease seemed to have been hereditary, as several of his family or relatives had also died of it. He leaves many well-known relatives and grown children.

THE IRISH.

LOUGH MASK CAMP, Nov. 15.—There was unusual stir in the camp last night when the Constabulary brought a rumor that 1,200 men were going to make an attack. The report turned out to be baseless, but the usual precautions were taken. Sentries were stationed along the outskirts of the demesne, pass-words were issued, and the little army prepared to turn out at the first note of alarm. Another company was sent to the camp to-day, by way of reinforcements, but it seems that there was not the slightest need for alarm, as the country is patrolled by Constabulary for miles around, while the force is on the alert everywhere, and the slightest gathering would instantly be known. A large train of army stores arrived this afternoon from Claremorris, under the escort of cavalry, infantry, and Constabulary.

In the Third ward lives a family, a poor and perhaps honest family, who have lately moved there from the First ward. The family have always caused considerable trouble among neighbors, and last night war broke out again. The family consists of a mother, daughter and son. Last night a stone-throwing match was going on between the young man and some fellows who seemed to be trying to get into the house. A neighbor hearing the noise went to learn the cause, and on sight he became a target for the stone-throwing. He informed the Marshal, who went to the house about 1 o'clock. All seemed quiet, but supposing "the gang" was inside, he demanded admittance. The family delayed, and told him to wait, but fearing that it was only a ruse to allow the inmates time to escape, he forced the door open. The young man came for the Marshal with a club, but was speedily knocked down, and quiet gained. There appeared to be no one in the house and the two women and the young man, but a pile of stones in the center of the floor showed that munitions of war were still at hand. A stalwart talking to closed the scene, the family promising to remain quiet.

CHRIST GERBER, Wholesale Hardware, Toledo, Ohio, says:—The Excelsior Kidney Pills has accomplished more for my wife in three weeks than all the medicine she has taken in three years. Refer all skeptics to me.—See Ad.

PERSONAL.

—George Seacraft, Jr., who has been so very ill, is reported as better.

—A. J. Ray is being visited by his sister, who for a time lived here with him.

—Will Evenson is put on the sick list today. It is hoped that it is nothing serious.

—Wm. V. Morrison, who returned the other day from Dakota, left this morning for a visit to Eastern friends.

—Mr. Clark, of Georgetown, Colorado, spent the Sabbath in the city, visiting his sister-in-law, Mrs. A. J. Mead.

—Miss Carrie Armstrong, of Oregon, Wis., made a brief visit to friends here last week, and returned home Saturday.

—George W. Bay, who for several months has been at Escanaba, is home again for a week's stay, and will then return to his work there. He was called hither by the death and funeral of his wife's father, Rev. P. D. Pease, which occurred at Fort Atkinson.

—Lion J. B. Cassaday went to Madison today to take his oath as Associate Justice, and make other preparations for entering upon his new duties. He will not probably take his seat on the Supreme bench until the next call of the calendar, which will be in about two weeks.

—A telegram received this morning from J. J. R. Pease, states that he has reached Kansas City, but his son has become so much worse, that they cannot proceed further at present. This will be sad news to the many friends who have waited so anxiously for his safe arrival here in better health.

—C. C. Decker, travelling agent of the Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company, Worcester, Mass., was in the city, Saturday, and put up at John Griffith's Venetian balcony, a sample of a new kind of barbed wire for fencing. It's more like a ribbon than a wire, and has some peculiarities which excite considerable attention and talk from those who stop to look at it.

—W. J. Banks has returned, having retired from the position of advance agent of the New Orleans Manifest, whom he left at Winona, Minn., or they left him, the troupe scattering. Judging from the kind of a show the troupe gave here, it is a wonder they have come together so long, but from the press notices in some of the northern papers the show must have improved, or else the editors' comments must have been stretched to the utmost.

—Mr. Drew and family, of New Hampshire, are among the late settlers in Jansville. They are stopping at present with J. A. Blount and family, to whom they are related, and Mr. Drew expects, for the present, to live upon Mr. Blount's farm, near the city. They have brought with them the remains of a daughter, who died some thirteen years ago, and whose last request was, that if the family moved, her remains should be taken to their new home. They will now be interred in Oakhill cemetery, Mr. Drew deciding to make his permanent home here.

A Word to our Readers.

When you hear of a remedy that will cure all diseases, beware of it; but when you hear of a pure vegetable compound which claims to cure only certain parts of the body, and furnishes high proof that it does this, you can safely try it with the assurance that it will help you. This is just what Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure does. It cures all troubles of the lower portion of the body and none others. It will not help the tooth-ache, curdles nor consumption but it will put your body in a vigorous and healthy condition where you can enjoy life and appreciate its good things. Try it.

WEEK OF PRAYER.

In accordance with the arrangements made by the National conference of the Young Men's Christian Association this week is set apart as a week of prayer for young men and the Association work. Last evening the pastors of the Baptist and Methodist churches preached sermons to young men. Yesterday afternoon Cannon's hall was filled and the Young Men's Christian Association meeting held there was decidedly interesting. This evening a cottage prayer meeting will be held at the residence of N. Dearborn, in the Fourth ward. Wednesday evening another meeting will be held in the social rooms of the Baptist church, and other cottage prayer meetings will be arranged for the rest of the week, and will be announced Wednesday evening.

When you visit New York City, either for business or pleasure, you will find that the Grand Central Hotel, 667 Broadway, under the management of Keefe, McKim & Co., the very best equipped hotel that you can stop at. The prices are only $5.00 per day for all rooms except those with parlor and bath. Make a note of it.

FROM RING TO RING.

Eucelphus Leaves the Circus Ring to Answer the Ring of the Alarm Bell.

The East side hose company have been long waiting to almost swap their kingdom for a horse, to draw the cart, and at last they have got one, and through the kindly generosity of Barr Robbins, they haven't had to give up even a part of their kingdom to get it. He is no common horse either. Wasay "he" because he isn't a common "it." He is one of Job's model horses that "nocteth at fear and is not affrighted." He smelleth the cart-hin from afar, he paweth in the stall, and rejoiceth in his strength, and the glory of his nostrils is terrible, even while the nostrils of others are weeping with the epizootic. He is indeed a model horse, and in strength and agility is just the kind of a steed to get a hose cart to a fire in good condition and in quick time. Such a wonderful horse needed a wonderful name, and the boys have christened him "Eucelphus," after Alexander's great warhorse, of whom he is deemed a worthy successor. Some of the boys thought it was a little too brief a name for beauty, but as it could not be painted over the stable door if it was any longer, they withdrew their objection. Others objected that it was too long a name, for a fire horse, and that a building would be all burned to ashes, before the horse could be called from the stable, but they were reconciled to call him "Ceph" in case of an alarm, and giving him the full title in times of peace.

Having got the horse, and having christened him, the next thing was to teach him his new profession. This took time, but by dint of steady work every evening the boys have got him well broken in, and the next alarm of fire will see that hose cart there, waiting for the flames to get under way enough to show where it needs putting out. The horse had some peculiarities which had to be overcome before he could be thus broken to such quick time. He had been so long in the circus business that some habits were pretty well formed. When Charlie Swartz first picked up the reins to drive him, Eucelphus wouldn't budge. John Sighday, who thought he had learned something by reading the Scientific American, followed out a suggestion found there, and running into Brownell's grocery store, got a couple of hampers of sugar, and tried to coax "Ceph" with these, but the old horse had been "inside the ring" too long to take taffy. Chief Engineer Young studied out the problem, and concluded that he was waiting for the band to give the grand entree. Young gave a blast on his trumpet and "Ceph" started. He fairly danced in single file, curved his neck, shook out his tail, pawed and capered, and started in all his glory, but no rein would guide him. He made as true a circle as was ever shovelled up for a ring, and around and around he went, and nothing would induce him to go straight down Main street. The only way to stop the circling was to open the engine house doors, and leave the boys stand in double line while he danced through into what he thought was the dressing room. A consultation was held. It would take too long to get to a fire by traveling around a circle. At last Jim Moore suggested that they must get the idea into Eucelphus' head that he was in a street parade, and not under the tent. But how? George Lillie solved it. They must have banners on the cart, and a few goddesses of liberty, or continental soldiers, or something of that sort. An old fireman's shirt was torn up for banners, but there was no fellow built just right for a goddess of liberty. Will Phillips suggested that they might make Eucelphus believe it was a wild animal cage he was driving, and as he had the honor of suggesting it, the boys said he should initiate the routs of the infuriated beasts. The hose cart was drawn out, the pieces of the bloody shirt tied on. Phillips climbed up on the reel prepared to bellow, and Eucelphus was started with a wave of red flannel and a roar of terror. The snowy white steel pulled out pleasantly, answered the rein promptly, and all was well. But then it wouldn't do to let it go this way every time there was a fire. It took too much flannel and too much hulloing. But evening after evening the work went on patiently. One piece of red flannel was taken off, then another, and so at last even the roar of the wild beasts was done away with, and now Eucelphus jerks that hose cart over the pavement as promptly and as nimbly as he ever danced around a ring, or pulled an embowazoned cart.

Some warrant a cure when the Fee is provided. Men doubt it however, and are undecided.

But when Pimples and Blotches your features do mar, Spring Blossom is the best cure by far. For sale by A. J. Roberts and Croft & Sherer.

THE WEATHER.

REPORTED BY FREDRICK & EVENSON, DRUGGISTS.

The thermometer at 6 o'clock last night stood at 23 degrees above zero; at 1 o'clock A. M., to-day, at 18 degrees above; at 7 o'clock A. M., at 17 degrees above, and at 1 o'clock P. M., at 27 degrees above. Cloudy. Snow last night.

CAUGHT AND CAGED.

As stated in Saturday evening's Gazette, the property stolen from Stephen Delaney's house Friday evening has been recovered with the exception of two pairs of pants. Following the finding of the property was the arrest of the owner of the trunk which held them, Miss Ellen Honnessy, a young lady who has been employed in the family of several citizens here as a servant girl. She was making arrangements to go to Chicago, but has concluded not to go yet. She was brought before Justice Nolan Saturday evening, and the examination set for this afternoon, bail being fixed at $400. In default of this she remained in jail over Sunday. This afternoon an examination was held showing the value of the property stolen as $85. She was held to trial in the Circuit Court in the sum of $400.

ON THE BOARD.

To-morrow evening "Col. Sellers" will be given at the Opera house by John T. Raymond and his excellent comedy company. When Mr. Raymond was here before circumstances joined themselves so together that there was no great crowd to hear him, as there should have been. In fact the audience was rather light, and many on hearing the loud praise of those who did attend, were equally loud in expressing their regret at missing the treat. Another chance is given them to-morrow night. Those who went before, can certainly enjoy going again, as it is one of those plays which grow better and better, and those who did not go will receive but little sympathy if they miss this opportunity. Everybody knows of "Col. Sellers" and his inimitable fund of fun, and the amusement that he is to be here should be enough. An evening cannot be crowded more full of enjoyment in comedy than will be to-morrow night.

INDICTMENTS.

New York, Nov. 15—4 A. M.—The Grand Jury will reconvene this morning but it is not likely that any additional indictments will be found to-day against the prisoners implicated in the forged Money letter. Kenneth Phillips' bail will be renewed. An indictment is not likely to be found against him before Tuesday or Wednesday. That one will be brought in follows as a matter of course after the decision of Judge Davis.
